CAMPUS TOUR:

WEST CAMPUS: 1 Start on Chapel Drive, heading to Duke Chapel. On the left is Few Quad, named after former university President William Preston Few, who led the transformation of Trinity College into Duke University in 1924. 2 The James B. Duke statue honors the tobacco and textile entrepreneur and philanthropist whose donation led to the creation of Duke University. 3 Duke Chapel can accommodate 1,700 people. Standing 210 feet high, the Chapel features a 50-bell, four-octave carillon played daily and a custom-designed Flentrop organ, the last of its kind made. Inside, you see the beautiful vaulted ceiling and the 77 stained-glass windows depicting stories from the Old Testament and New Testament. 4 To the left of the Chapel is the Bryan University Center, home to student organizations, theaters, dining facilities, the Gothic Bookshop, and the University Store. 5 The West Union building, the original student union, offers a variety of food choices. The building is also home to diverse student groups, including the Mary Lou Williams Center for Black Culture, the office of The Chronicle, and the Center for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Life. 6 As you leave the West Union, turn right and see some of the original residential quads. Nearby is West-Edens Link, Duke's newest West Campus residence hall, as well as Edens Quad, which features a variety of selective living groups including special arts and languages dorms. 7 Across Towerview Road are Duke's intramural and varsity athletic facilities. Here you'll find Wilson Recreation Center, where students and staff play basketball or racquetball, run track and work out. To the right is Card Gym, perhaps best recognized for its grassy area out front—otherwise known as Krzyzewskiville—where students camp out for basketball tickets before major games. Nearby is Cameron Indoor Stadium, home of the basketball Blue Devils. In this area are also Wallace Wade Football Stadium and Koskinen Stadium for soccer and lacrosse, and the Jack Coombs Baseball Stadium. 8 At the corner of Science Drive and Towerview Road is the Terry Sanford Institute of Public Policy, a hub for many highly regarded policy programs and centers. 9 Head back up Science Drive toward the main part of West Campus, and you pass many of Duke's cutting-edge research facilities, including the new French Science Center, which provides research and teaching space in biological anthropology and anatomy, chemistry, mathematics, and physics; and the Levine Science Research Center, the largest single-site interdisciplinary scientific facility at any American university. 10 Past the traffic circle is the Pratt School of Engineering complex, including the Fitzpatrick Center for Interdisciplinary Engineering, Medicine, and Applied Sciences. 11 Behind the Fitzpatrick Center is the Divinity School, which includes a chapel. 12 Heading toward the James B. Duke statue, to the left is Perkins Library, which in 2005 was connected by a gateway to the new Bostock Library, thus dramatically expanding collection, classroom and study space. 13 The original academic quad buildings of West Campus house departments. 14 Across Flowers Drive are the graceful 55-acre Sarah P. Duke Gardens. 15 Head to Anderson Street, turn right, and walk two blocks to the spectacular Nasher Museum of Art, on the corner of Anderson Street and Duke University Road. This 65,000-square-foot museum was designed by renowned architect Rafael Viñoly. 16 A short drive from West Campus is Duke Forest, where 30 miles of trails wind through mixed hardwood and pine forests. Within Duke Forest, the Lemur Center houses the world's largest collection of endangered prosimian primates in naturalistic enclosures. EAST CAMPUS: 17 As you begin your East Campus tour near the main bus stop, you'll be in the midst of many of the East Campus residence halls, home to all first-year students. 18 Head up the quad, along the right-hand sidewalk, to the East Campus Union and Marketplace the center of student life on East. 19 Behind the union is the Ark, constructed in 1898 as the first college gymnasium in North Carolina—now used for dance classes and student production rehearsals. 20 Continue along the sidewalk beside the quad, and you see the statue of Benjamin N. Duke, who was the brother of James B. Duke and the primary benefactor of Trinity College after it relocated to Durham. 21 Baldwin Auditorium is the site of musical performances, student-sponsored speakers. It is named for Alice M. Baldwin, Trinity College's first woman professor who later became dean of the Woman's College established in 1930. 22 To the left of Baldwin is the Mary Duke Biddle Music Building, featuring practice rooms, as well as a large rehearsal hall and ensemble rehearsal studios. 23 Just beyond the tennis courts is Brodie Recreation Center, the athletic hub of East Campus. 24 Adjacent to Brodie and beside the athletic fields is Bell Tower Residence Hall, Duke's newest dorm. The residence hall includes classroom and laundry facilities, a new campus police substation, and the 95-year-old Trinity College bell. 25 The Lilly Library, once the site of the university's art museum. Renovated in 1993, it now houses the entire fine arts book collection and features a tranquil Chinese reading room. 26 Continue down the quad toward the bus stop, and you pass Carr Building, which houses classrooms and a foreign language lab. Directly across from Carr is the Friedl Building, which was recently renovated and now houses Cultural Anthropology, Literature, African and African-American Studies, Latino/a Studies, Critical US Studies, and the Duke Human Rights Center. 27 Just beyond the bus stop is West Duke Building, completed in 1911. Once home to the university's first bookstore and barbershop, the building now houses the Kenan Institute for Ethics, classes for Germanic languages, and ROTC offices. 28 In the center of the nearby quad is the statue of Washington Duke, the father of James B. and Benjamin N., and the man for whom the university is named. 29 Across the drive is East Duke Building, originally the main administrative building of Trinity College, and now home to the university's art and art history and women's studies departments and the Nelson Music Room. Connected to East Duke is the White Lecture Hall, which features a 243-seat auditorium. 30 During the early 20th century, the Sower statue, in front of East Duke Building, played the role of Cupid. As couples strolled the campus, they placed pennies in his hand, and if the pennies disappeared, the woman gave her date a kiss.
